Mae gasps awake…she’s on an airplane bound for Utah, where she begins the same holiday all over again. With one hilarious disaster after another sending her back to the plane, Mae must figure out how to break free of the strange time loop—and finally get her true love under the Christmas tree.

But perhaps worst of all, this is the last Christmas Mae will be at her favorite place in the world. As she packs her winter coat, her makeup, and her heart, Mae wonders if it is possible for her to go on in the same world where she lives, with the same people, the same dog, the same family. Might it be possible to break free and find her way home? And if she could, would she even want to?

The Vanishing Half by Brit Bennett

The Five sisters born to black mothers and white fathers in small, southern black community and running away at age sixteen, it’s not just the shape of their bodies that is different as adults, it’s everything: their families, their communities, their racial identities. Many years later, one sister lives with her white husband in the same Southern town she once tried to escape. The other sister lives with her black daughter in the same southern town she once tried to escape. The fates of the twins remain intertwined. What will they know nothing of her past. Still, even separated by geography and race, Mae and her twin sister are always connected, alternately pulled together and torn apart by the complex and dangerous love between them.
